

LOUIS B. SCHWARTZ

The editors of the University of Pennsylvania Law Review take great pleasure in dedicating this issue to Louis B. Schwartz, who retires this year as Benjamin Franklin and University Professor of Law. Since he first joined the Penn faculty in 1946, Professor Schwartz has been an important presence at the Law School, introducing thousands of students to the principles of antitrust, criminal law, and professional responsibility. His dedication to and love of teaching are unsurpassed. Yet at the same time, he has remained active and influential in the legal, political, and cultural world beyond the Law School. The diversity of Professor Schwartz' activities and the broad range of his interests are reflected in the following tribute, which consists of excerpts from his writings, both published and unpublished, from 1938 to the present. We wish Professor Schwartz every success in his future endeavors.
